Psalm 138

My work has sometimes required me to speak before groups ranging from a handful of people to several hundred. I no longer feel physically sick as I approach the microphone. This was not always the case. When I was younger, my fear of public speaking was so great that I dropped out of a course in public speaking! What changed? Some of the change was likely a combination of maturity, practice, and experience. An even greater factor, though, was finding a purpose for speaking in public. I wanted to plead the case for various causes that are important to me. As I became aware of the needs of a particular ministry, it became easier to speak to others about them-telling the story became more important than my anxieties about public speaking. When I prayed for courage to address a group of people, the butterflies in my stomach settled down and made room for my passion for the cause to swell. Many people have some fear of public speaking. When we find a cause we believe in strongly and turn to God for help, we are emboldened to speak up. Dear God, thank you for the many ways you respond when we call to you through Jesus Christ. Amen.
